Korea Launches New Asian Institute for Energy, Environment and Sustainability

By Warren Karlenzig on October 11, 2008 4:10 PM | Permalink | Comments \(0\) | TrackBacks \(0\)

Next week I will be back in Korea speaking at the new Asian Institute for Energy, Environment and Sustainability \(AIEES\) at Seoul National University. Seoul National is the top-ranked university in South Korea.

The event is called "New Vision and Strategies of Research Institutes for Sustainable Development," and was put together by Professor Ki-Ho Kim, of Seoul National's Graduate School of Environmental Studies.

Professor Kim and I had lunch on the scenic campus on a warm March day during my US Department of State-sponsored tour of the nation. The university and the city of Seoul are hatching a plan to make the university campus a living model of a creative and green neighborhood, celebrating the arts, cultural attractions and the latest in sustainable urban planning, design and technology.
